Wim Nieuwenhuizen	Relevance of Internationalization and Interculturalisation of social work:  Social workers and related professionals increasingly have to address social problems that are being precipitated by international world-wide forces and events. Students and teachers have to expand their repertoires and competencies by learning about theories, approaches, methods and actors in international development work as well as give them the chance to practice in the field. Social workers need to be trained to work with various stakeholders at community, national and international levels. What are the trends in the field and what competences are needed? What is the role of professional bodies and do they recognize the need for international certification and cooperation of social workers?	Abstract
